Strings2 is an improved version of the Sysinternals strings tool that extracts all unicode/ascii strings from binary data. On top of the classical strings approach, this improved version is able to dump strings from process address spaces and also reconstructs assembly local variable assignment ascii/unicode strings.

Example Usage:
strings2 malware.exe
strings2 *.exe > strings.txt strings2 *.exe -nh -f -t -asm > strings.txt strings2 -pid 419 > process_strings.txt strings2 -pid 0x1a3 > process_strings.txt strings2 -system > all_process_strings.txt
cat abcd.exe | strings2 > out.txt

Flags:
-f          Prints the filename/processname before each string.
-r          Recursively process subdirectories.
-t          Prints the type before each string. Unicode, ascii, or assembly unicode/ascii stack push.
-asm       Only prints the extracted ascii/unicode assembly stack push-hidden strings.
-raw       Only prints the regular ascii/unicode strings.
-l [nchars] Minimum number of characters that is a valid string. Default is 4.
-nh        No header is printed in the output.
-pid       The strings from the process address space for the specified PID will be dumped. Use a '0x' prefix to specify a hex PID.
-system    Dumps strings from all accessible processes on the system. This takes awhile.
